CREATION.

Behold Creation's vast extent, The earth, the lowing sens, and sky, liow great, how kind, the God who sent There charats to feast the mortal eye

With rapture do we gaze around, And for and mear thy works are found Endices, pleasing, ever new.

Who can doubt thy gracious name Doubt thy power above, below, Doubt a suffering Jesus came Mortals to save from sin and woc.

Doubt that by thy sovereign hand, All the glowing planets more, Doubt each blowing we command, Proofs of thy exalted love.

All, all, superior God are thine. All await thy kind controll, Nature proves thy power divine, Eternal, yes, from pale to pole

Hail, immortal Spirit, bail, O'er us still let mercy fall, Tho' to own thee, thousands fail, Millions claim thee, God of all.

TO MRS. 8---Hannah, the fascinating uniles Of worldly pleasure beam on thee. And thou hast yielded to their wiles Till they have won thy heart from me

It was not thus in early youth When rose my joys in prospect bright, Thy friendship, thy unspotted truth, Len. all those joys a lovelier light.

I deemed thee but another form That held the same high-feeling soul, Thy love, a fiame so pure and warm, Twould burn when Time had ceased to roll !

Oh! 'twas a sweet and hallowed theme Like some deceptive, spleadid dream Close followed by a day of il'.

And when 'twas mine from thee to rove, And wedlock's holy bands I prov'd, And tried to write thee what was love, And what it was to be belov'd :-

Methought the radiant lustre beam'd in strong reflection back on thee, So raptur'd thy soft spirit seem'd, Such bliss was all my bliss to thee.

Oh wedded life !- how fair and bright It rose on my enchanted view, As lovely as the morning light, tlut transient as its gliffering dew !

Blossom by blossom fading dropt, Till all the gay-wrought wreath was gone, E'an that "which twined with me" was cropt,

My aching boson beat alone! Alone in this wide wilderness-I clasped my playful fatherless,

The world to me was solitude! But where wast thou? through that drear night, No ray of comfort couldst thou send? Ah! too, too, rich and happy quite

To think upon thy hapless friend Of all I "lov'd and left behind." Thy heart alone preserved its calm; Of every hoseen, true and kind, But thine withheld the bleeding balm.

Oh! next to Heaven's all healing power, Shed on a spirit tempest-tost, Those precious drops in entner hour, Assured my soul, "all is not last!"

Heaven great thou po'er may'st want the aid Of sympathy, when joys are flown, And were "thy soul in my soul's stead," I would not do as thou hast done.

But fare-thee-well!-beneath the sun, Though thou and I no more may meet, To circle round the Saviour's throne, May Sovereign mercy bring our fact!

"The peace of God" upon thes shine, Thy "heart and mind through Jeous keep," His soul subdoing discipline, Teach thee to "weep with them that weep."

tions which many will imagine the night of home was o calculated to produce. I thought, with a meisocholy smite, of the grief I had felt when I left it. Aye, all are gone, said I; in my father's house I am a solitary avanger; for what end was I to toil away my lite in a foreign land? That I might return rich and happy to my friends! Blob I am, but where even my friends with whom I was to have spent the evening of my days? Alas! they are gone, and my life has been passed in vain. In the same spirit did I wander along the streets of my native town. I felt myself an isolated, lanely being. Every one scenned happy but myself; every one had his porants, every one had his companions and friends. I alone had got hone; a new generation had aprining up, and those whom I had formerly known as young men, were strangely metamorphosed into grave looking gentlemen, with grown up families, and many of them with grand-children.—Such as they were, however. with grown up families, and many of them with grand-children.—Such as they were, now-ever, I was glad to meet with them, though I often could not help wondering that they looked so old. The town itself, too, accura-no longer the same I had left behind me. Magnineem buildings had succeeded to old fashioned habitations, and the fields, over which I used to shoot, were now loaded with dwellings like palaces. It was a proof of the dwellings like palaces. It was a proof of the pro-perity of the place, and yet I was half an-gry at the alteration. I remembered it to nave been in when I left the place forty years ago.

On reaching home, I found that Mary Lindsey was in the country; but when she returned my first care was to visit her. I have said she was still unmarried, and though I had long ceased to love, yet I felt my heart beat as I approached the well remembered house. I pictured to myself the transport with which she would throw herself into my arms, and fondly believed that the joy of our meeting would repay us for the pain of parting. My heart began to beat more quickly as I gently knecked at the door, and when the acryant appeared I could hardly ask him if Mas Lindseried. appeared I could hardly ask him if M as Lind sey," said be, slowly repeating the name, as I und-sey," said be, slowly repeating the name, as If uncertain whom I meant. It was the only thing I had yet seen which was still the same as I had left it. Looking about me, I soon discovered old friends in the pictures which were hanging round the room. There was but one new one—it was the intideaps I had asked her to paint, and there it was hanging half finshed, exactly as I had seen it. At the other side of the room was the contraint of avoidable and of the room was the portrait of a youthful and beautiful face, which at once I recognized to be Mary's, i could scarcely help thinking that all that had passed for the last forty years was nothing out a truubled dram, as completely do the scene carry me back to she have of a county.

SECTORES OF AMERICA, BY A TRAVESTER.

IV. SKETCH-East Kentucky or New Kentuck

IV. SKETCH—Rost Kentucky or New Kentuck. It is well known that Kentucky extends from Virginia to the Mississippi; but all the descriptions of that State apply to the Limestone Region, which estends on the Ohio from Mayaville to the mouth of the Salt River below Louisville and the falls, and inland as far as the knobs or hilly region forming a semi circle South of Bairdstown, Danville, Mount Sticking, &c.

I have seen several intelligent men who had been many years in Kentucky, who had visited twenty towns from Mayaville to Louisville, and would insit that the whole of Kentucky was a Vimestone plain; while three three fourths of the state are a sandstone or slaty region and quite hilly.

The hills of Kentucky are branches of the Combittand Mountains, which are themselves only large hills of gristone, pebblestone, vandstone, grauwacke, &c.; they extend to the North as far as helow the mouth of the Scioto, while to the South they reach the limitation basin of the Cumberland River, which they bound to the North; thus forming a middle section; which has a kind of an irthmus or narrow point near the centre of the State.

The large hilly region inclosed between isthmus or narrow point near the centre of the State.

The large hilly region inclosed between Virginia, Tennessee, this isthmus, the Cumberland Issain and the Northern basin, is properly East Envecky; but it is called Naw Kawveck on the spot; because it was settled after the limestone basin, which they call therefore Oan Kawveck. The first settlers of Kentucky were not inclined to settle in that hilly and rocky region, which they called the wilderness; but thay hastened to the fertile limestone plains of the Kentucky River.

called the witderness; but they hastened to the fertile limestone plains of the Kentucky River.

The Western part of this hilly region is called the Energy River Courty, because Green River flows through it; and this name is by extension applied to the limestone plain bordering the Cumberland, and half of which is in Tennessee. West Kentucky is another region West of the Cumberland and Tennessee River, and mostly alluvial.

It is in East Kentucky that all the great Rivers of the State take their rise, such as the Cumberland River, Green River, Salt River, Kentucky River, Licking River, &c.—
It is there that most of the natural curiosities of the State are met with; such as the falls of Cumberland, the saltpetre caves, the rock houses, the knobs, the licka, the sucks, &c., but the Mammoth Cave is a Ritle West of the Isthmus; yet in the hilly country.

The aspect of East hentucky is similar to West Virginia and West Carolina, very broken and rocky; but all the rocks are horizonai or nearly so. One half of the soil is unfit for cultivation and occupied by knobs or round hills and rocky ridges or spura. The valleys are, however, truifful, having many hottons of alluvious or himestone near the streams.

East Kentucky, although larger than New

Fast Kentucky, although larger than New East Kentucky, although larger man New Jersey, is not very populous; but there dwells a bardy race of men, very different from the planters of the fertile plains. They have very tew slaves, and till themselves the ground,— When treed of their soil and toil, or when they can afford a removal, they congrate to other parts, and as far as illinous or Missouri, Every year a great number desert their homes in that way, often leaving their houses and im-provements standing. They are rude, rough, poor, unlettered and ignorant; but kind, ge-nerous and sociable.

A MOTHER.

But in use relation does woman exceptise so deep an influence, both immediately and prospectively as its shart of a mother. To her is committed the care of the influent mind.—Upon her devalves the care of the influent mind.—Upon her devalves the care of the first stage of that course of discipline which its to form a being, perhaps the most frait and helplen in the words, the fearless ruler of animated creation, whose studies call into exercise the first affections that spring up in our hearts. She cherishes, and expands the curilest gens of our intellects. She breathes over so the deepest devetions. She lifts our little hands, and teaches us to hisp in prayer. She watches over us the a guardian sacrt, and protects in through all our heightest years. She follows us into the world of men, and frees in us, and dieses siz, when she deep not offerencies upon the earth. What constitutes the equire of every house? Whither do our thoughts now, when our fect are weary with wandering, and our hearts sich with disappointments?—Where shall the trunnt and forgetful humband go for thoughts now, when our fect are weary with wandering, and outer hearts sich with disappointments?—Where shall the trunnt and forgetful humband go for typapoutty mailtoyed, and without design, but to the squass of her who is ever ready, and writing to share in his adversity or his prosperity. And if there be a tybunal, where the sine and notice of a forward child may hope for pardon and forgiveness this side naveles.

Why the symbol of Liberty, was first used, and why worn by Students at Universities.—
The use of caps and hats is referred to the year 1449, the first seen in these parts of the world being at the entry of Charles VII. into Rouen; from that time they began to take place of the hoods, or chaperoons, that had been used till then. When the cap was of velvet, they called it mortier; when of wood simply bonnet. None but kings, princes, and knights were allowed the use of the increign.
The cap was the head-dress of the clercy and The cap was the head-dress of the clergy and graduates. Paquier says, that it was succently a part of the hood worn by the people of the robe, the skirts whereof being out off as commodious over for the head; which round cap being afterwards assumed by the people, those of the grown changed it for a square one, first invented by a Frenchman, called Patrouit tet. He adds, that the giving of the cap to the students in the universities, was to de-note, that they had acquired full liberty, and were no longer subject to the rod of their au periors in ionistion of the ancient Romans, who gave a pricus, or cap, to their slaves, in the exemuny of making them free. Whence this, proverb, "Fourse serves at poleum,"—Hence also, the cap is the symbol of Liberty,

BARON TRENCK'S MOUSE. BARON TRENCK'S MOUSE.

Baron Trenck, in his memoirs, mentions, that whist shut up in a duageon by his avage persecutor, "Frederick the Great," he had so tamed a messe, that it would play around him and eat from his mouth. He adds, "in this small sminal i dissovered proofs of intelligence too great to ever gain belief; were I to write them, prinsts would rail, mouks grantly, and such philosophers as suppose man alone endowed with the power of thought—allowing nothing but what they call, inclinet, to minals—manife prochim me a februlous writer. This intelligent mones had nearly been my ruin. I had diverted styself with it during the night; it had been nibbling at my done and capering on a trenther. The seniture happened to hear our amusements, and called the officers; they brand also, and said all was not right in my dungeon. At deep break my door resounded; the town major, a smith, and a mason entered; flooring, walls, chairs, and my own person, were all scrutinised but in vain. They asked what was the noise they had heard. I mentioned the mouse, then whistled, and it came and jumped upon my shoulder. Orders were given that I should be deprived of its society! I carnestly entreaded they would at least spare its life. The officer on guard gave me his word of humour that he would present it to a lady, who would treat it with the utmost tenderness. He took it away, and turned it loose in the guard room but it was tame to me slone, and sought a hiding place. It had been taken away blindfold; that is to say, wrapped in a hundler-chief. How then did it find its master? Did it know or did it wait the hour of visitation All were desirous of obtaining this mouse, but the major carried it off for his lady. She put it into a cage, where it wind, refused all sustenance, and in a few days was found dead.

THANSMISSION OF SOUND. "The extreme facility with which sources are heard at a considerable distance, in severely cold weather, has often been a subject of remark; but a circumstance occurred at Port theren, which deserves to be noticed, as affording a sort of measure to this facility, or at least of conveying to others some definite ideas of the fact. Licutemant Foster having occasion to send a man from the observatory to the opposite shore of the harbor, a measured distance of 6,696 feet, or about one statute mile and two tenths, in order to fix a mesuired distance of 6,096 feet, or about one si-tute mile and two tenths, in order to fix a me-ridian mark, hai placed a person half way be-tween, to repeat his directions; but he found on trial that this precaution was unnecessary, as he could, without difficulty, keep up a conversation with the man at the distant station. -Parry's Voyages.

Winter.—The length of the evenings in Winter, which renders it necessary to find some sedentary and domestic diversion, may also contribute to render reading a more favourite sinuscinent in winter than in minmer. Blooks enable the imagination to create a summer at the mist of frost and snow; and with the assistance of a cheerful fire, whose comfort bie warnth supplies the absence of the sun, the winter may be made as the season of vernal breeze or solar effulgence.

"Solid Comfort may be copiously derived from the following sources: a quiet con-science, health, liberty, one's time one's own: science, health, liberty, one's time one's own; or if not, usefully, innocently and moderately employed by others; a freedom from installant passions of all kinds, a habit of living within one's income, and of saving something for extraordinary occasions, an ability arising from rational economy to deflay all necessary and expedient expences, a habit of good humour, and aptitude to be pleased rather than offended, a preparation for adversity, love of one's family, sincerity to friends, benevolence to manking, and piety to God.

Begin at the letter D in the centre, and read either way, and you will find 'drinking will ruin us' may be read more times than there are days in the year. And I believe there are as many ways in which it will tend to our ruin, either temporal, spiritual, or eter

MUTUAL HEARTS

Two mutual hearts are like the rills, In adding when single,
That wander from the mountal hills, in river streams to orderle!
And then along the fertile vale,
Their banks with blossoms painted,
They leave their billows to the gale,
Untroubled and untainted.

Two mutual hearts are like the stars
That aid each other's aliming,
When gatas of day the evening bars,
And rowes any declining;
And through the long and lonesonon night
That spreads its pall of bashness,
They mingle their etherial light,
To fill the world with gladness.

Two mutual hearts are like the flowers.
That twine themselves together,
When morning sends the dreuching showers,
Or evening comes to wither:
And when they fall—as fall they must—
